ENVIRONMENTAL DISPUTE
RESOLUTION PROGRAM

Wallace Stegner Center Environmental Dispute Resolution Program Collaboration Certificate Course (CCC) Online Professional Training

Apply by April 30, 2025

Limited scholarships may be available

Environmental, natural resource, and public policy issues are ecologically, politically, culturally, and emotionally complex. Not only do they usually cross jurisdictional boundaries, affect diverse stakeholders, and involve multiple institutions; they also typically involve high levels of uncertainty and complicated science. As a result, they are often contentious and controversial.

Collaborative efforts that meaningfully engage diverse agencies and stakeholders have considerable potential to help involved parties work through conflict to co-create and implement mutually-beneficial, effective solutions. The 7-session Collaboration Certificate Course (CCC), offered by the Wallace Stegner Center Environmental Dispute Resolution (EDR) Program at the S.J. Quinney College of Law, teaches mid- and upper-level professionals working on environmental, natural resource, and public policy issues the “art and science” of collaborative problem-solving and conflict resolution through lectures, case studies, peer-to-peer sharing, discussion, and simulation exercises. Participants put the concepts and skills learned through the course into action in a real-life setting by conducting a situation assessment project.

The CCC is delivered virtually via highly interactive and engaging sessions that emphasize peer-to-peer learning and networking.

CCC participants will acquire:

- Awareness and skills to help them harness the co-creative potential of conflict and participate in multi-party collaborative processes;
- Techniques for identifying opportunities for collaborative problem-solving, as well as skills for convening, facilitating, and sustaining collaborative efforts; and
- Experience assessing whether a situation is ready for a collaborative approach.

Instructors

- Danya Rumore is the Director of the Wallace Stegner Center EDR Program. She holds a Ph.D. in Environmental Policy and Planning and has over 15 years of experience in stakeholder engagement, consensus building, and collaborative process design in the context of environmental, natural resource, and public policy issues.
- Emily Gaines-Crockett is the Associate Director of the Wallace Stegner Center EDR Program. She holds a Master’s degree in Environmental Science and has a background in environmental conservation and education.
- Guest lecturers with experience working on collaborative efforts will also contribute to the course.

Tuition

Tuition for the CCC is $1,600. Limited scholarships may be available.

Requirements

- Course participants must attend all sessions, complete all pre-work in Canvas, complete a situation assessment project, and demonstrate sufficient mastery of the course content in order to receive a certificate of completion. They are encouraged to consult with their employer when applying to the CCC to ensure that they will be able to reserve the necessary time to prepare for and attend class sessions.
- Participants will need to prepare for each session by reviewing assigned materials (readings, videos, etc.) and completing online quizzes before class. This will amount to ~2-4 hrs of preparation for each session.

After the course

Upon successful completion of the course, participants will receive a certificate of completion. Course graduates will join prior course participants as EDR Fellows. Graduates will also have the opportunity to become members of the Collaborative Leadership Network, which provides continued education, coaching, and connection among individuals who have completed an intensive training or coaching program with the Wallace Stegner Center EDR Program.

Application

Applications are due April 30, 2025.

To apply for the CCC, visit <https://www.law.utah.edu/stegner-center/edr/edr-collaboration-certificate-course/>. Participants will be selected and notified by May 16, 2025. We will select participants to create a cohort representing a range of stakeholder groups. For more information, please contact emily.crockett@law.utah.edu.

Please note that federal agency employees are welcome in the CCC and are encouraged to apply for this course. We may also offer a separate cohort of the course specifically for federal agency employees (the Federal Collaboration Certificate Course, or FCCC). If you are a federal agency employee and are interested in the FCCC, contact emily.crockett@law.utah.edu.
